JUDGMENT

Nicholson AJ:

Introduction

[1] Soleprops 145 CC ('Soleprops'), the applicant, is the owner of a property situated at 359 Bulwer Street, Pietermaritzburg ('the property'). It seeks an order in terms of the Prevention of Illegal Eviction from and Unlawful Occupation of Land Act 19 of 1998 ('PIE Act') for the eviction of Mandla Felix Ndlovu (Mr Ndlovu), the first respondent, all those occupying through Mr Ndlovu, and the unknown unlawful occupiers of the property, being the second respondent.

[2] It is common cause that the second respondent occupies the property with the permission of, and as tenants of Mr Ndlovu.

Factual background

[3] On 24 March 2016, Soleprops and Mr Ndlovu entered into an agreement of lease whereby Soleprops leased the property to Mr Ndlovu.¹ A material condition of the agreement was that Mr Ndlovu would take occupation of the property in exchange for rental payments.

[4] While it is not apparent from the papers when Mr Ndlovu took occupation of the property, as a deposit was payable on or about 1 April 2016 with the rental to be paid on 1 May 2016, it may be inferred from the papers that Mr Ndlovu took occupation during this period.

[5] On 10 November 2016, Soleprops and Mr Ndlovu entered into a written deed of sale whereby Soleprops agreed to sell the property to Mr Ndlovu for an amount of R22 million.²

[6] Mr Ndlovu has since rented out individual portions of the property to students who attend the university in Pietermaritzburg, and has not made any allegation, neither in the papers or from the bar, that Mr Ndlovu resides on the premises. Accordingly, while this application is prosecuted under the PIE Act, the interest of Mr Ndlovu is merely commercial. The second respondents, being the students occupying through Mr Ndlovu have not opposed this application.

Common Cause

[7] Upon perusal of the papers, the following is either axiomatic or common cause:

7.1 Second respondent does not oppose the application.

7.2 Mr Ndlovu has neither paid the rental amount, nor the purchase price. Accordingly, he is in breach of both the deed of sale and the lease agreement.

7.3 Mr Ndlovu's interest in the property is commercial; accordingly, the PIE Act finds no application in Mr Ndlovu's circumstances.

7.4 Soleprops, through its attorney, sent two letters to Mr Ndlovu cancelling the deed of sale; the first letter was drafted on 6 January 2022³, and a second letter was drafted on 3 October 2022.⁴

7.5 Mr Ndlovu responded on 31 January 2022, and merely sought an extension but raised no other query.

7.6 Second respondent occupies the property for purposes of student accommodation and not as a primary residence.

7.7 In as far as the second respondent is concerned, it has not been disputed, neither in the papers, nor in argument before me, that Section 4 of PIE has not been complied with.

Dispute

[8] In his answering affidavit, Mr Ndlovu raises a single defence, namely that they do not occupy the property through the deed of sale but through the lease agreement, and accordingly, the wrong agreement had been cancelled. In the circumstances, they are not illegally on the property as they occupy the property through a lease agreement. In the premises, the single issue to be determined is whether or not the lease agreement had been cancelled.

[9] It is instructive that no defence relevant to the PIE Act has been raised. Accordingly, no grounds have been placed before me that it would not be just and equitable to evict second respondent.

Argument

[10] Mr Blomkamp, who appeared for Soleprops, made three submissions in motivation for the eviction order:

10.1 Firstly, when answering to the letter of cancellation, Mr Ndlovu merely sought an extension but did not raise the issue of the incorrect agreement being cancelled.

10.2 Secondly, at common law a lease may be cancelled either in the founding affidavit or in the summons, and accordingly, the lease has been cancelled in these papers.

³ Founding affidavit para 11.9 at page 10 and annexure 'FA3' at pages 26-27.

⁴ Founding affidavit para 15 at page 12 and annexure 'FA4' at pages 28-31.

10.3 Thirdly, he called upon the court to use pragmatism and common sense in dealing with this matter because if the matter is not dealt with on these papers, it would merely mean that Soleprops will immediately issue a cancellation letter putting Mr Ndlovu on terms to come up to date with the arrears which are in excess of R1 million, plus unpaid utilities in excess of R1.8 million and thereafter cancelled the lease, and return to court thereafter.

[11] Mr Zondi, who appeared for Mr Ndlovu, argued that in light of the deed of sale never having come into existence due to the fact that the condition precedent to raise the finance did not materialise, the lease agreement was revived and the occupation of the property is therefore not unlawful because Soleprop purported to cancel the non-existent agreement, and not the lease agreement. Accordingly, the lease agreement has not been cancelled and since they occupy the property through the lease agreement, their occupation is not unlawful.

[12] As I have already pointed out, it is common cause that Mr Ndlovu has complied with neither the lease agreement, nor the deed of sale. Furthermore, save for stating that he has effected various repairs to the property, he does not state when he intends complying with either of the agreements or bringing the arrear rental up to date. Accordingly, it appears that Mr Ndlovu intends remaining on the property indefinitely, at the expense of Soleprops.

[13] It is apparent that the deed of sale was concluded after the lease agreement. The two agreements cannot run parallel to each other, which would mean that the deed of sale would have cancelled the lease agreement. Accordingly, should the argument of Mr Ndlovu be followed, it would mean that before the deed of sale could have been concluded, Soleprops would have needed to ensure vacant occupation of the property by evicting Mr Ndlovu and thereafter giving him back occupation. This, in my view, would be unintelligible.

[14] Further, Mr Ndlovu failed to respond to the first letter of cancellation and in the second letter of cancellation, he merely requested time to respond without denying that they are in unlawful occupation and asserting that they occupy through the lease agreement and not the purchase and sale agreement. In this regard, *McWilliams v First Consolidated Holdings (Pty) Ltd*⁵ is instructive, where the court observed:

'I accept that "quiescence is not necessarily acquiescence" (see Collen v Rietfontein Engineering Works 1948 (1) SA 413 (A) at 422) and that a party's failure to reply to a letter asserting the existence of an obligation owed by such party to the writer does not always justify an inference that the assertion was accepted as the truth. But in general, when according to ordinary commercial practice and human expectation firm repudiation of such an assertion would be the norm if it was not accepted as correct, such party's silence and inaction, unless satisfactorily explained, may be taken to constitute an admission by him of the truth of the assertion, or at least will be an important factor telling against him in the assessment of the probabilities and the final determination of the dispute. And an adverse inference will the more readily be drawn when the unchallenged assertion had been preceded by correspondence or negotiations between the parties relative to the subject-matter of the assertion.'

[15] In the premises, Mr Ndlovu's failure to set the record straight once receiving the cancelation notices, and his failure to explain the reason for not setting the record straight, infers that Mr Ndlovu too believed that he occupied through the purchase and sale agreement, and raises the issue of the non-cancelation belatedly in the answering affidavit in a last-ditch attempt to conjure a defence.

[16] Even if I am wrong, various authorities encourage this court to use common sense and pragmatism⁶ as suggested by Mr Blomkamp. In light of the fact that Mr Ndlovu, is not complying with the lease agreement that he purports to be in effect and has not given any indication when and how he intends to comply with the agreement, it is not in the interest of justice to allow him to continue to occupy the property. Accordingly, applying common sense and pragmatism, the application must succeed.

[17] In the premises, I am of the view that sale agreement has been properly cancelled, and therefore, the application must succeed.

[18] Turning to the second respondent, it is trite that I have a discretion with regard to the eviction date and such discretion must be exercised judicially, in the interest of justice, and taking into account just and equitable considerations. It is common cause that second respondent are tertiary education students. The term for tertiary education comes to an end late November or early December. Accordingly, staying the eviction for six months will allow second respondent to complete the school year without disruption and without any prejudice to them.

[19] With regard to costs, it is usual for costs to follow the result. Mr Blomkamp has requested the costs of Senior Counsel to be awarded, in the event the applicant is successful. The respondent has not made any submissions in that regard. In light of the costs of the property and the importance of the matter, I see no reason not to grant the costs of Senior Counsel.

Order

[20] In the result, I make the following order:

1. The first respondent and the second respondent, and all those occupying through the first respondent are ordered to vacate the property described as Portion 11 of Erf 2935 Pietermaritzburg, situated at 359 Bulwer Street, Pietermaritzburg within six months of the granting of this order.
2. Should the first and second respondents, and all those occupying through the first respondent, fail to vacate the property described above, within the timeframe referred to above, the Sheriff or her duly appointed Deputy, together with the assistance of the South African Police Services and/or private security company, is directed to evict such persons from the property.
3. The first respondent is ordered to pay the costs of this application which include the costs of senior counsel where employed.
