NOTICE 1707 OF 1996

SOUTH AFRICAN LAW COMMISSION

Acting on a proposal by the Association of Arbitrators of South Africa, the South African Law Commission is currently investigating all facets of the law regarding international and domestic arbitration.

Political developments in South Africa are at present leading to increased regional trade and economic links with other countries. As business people regard arbitration as a favourite means of catering for dispute resolution, it is important that the country's arbitration law should be in line with international norms.

It is however being argued that the present South African law is not suitable for international commercial arbitration. The Arbitration Act, No. 42 of 1965 contains no provisions which expressly deal with international arbitration, while the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards Act, No. 40 of 1977 is limited to the enforcement of foreign awards only. It is further felt that the court's statutory powers and powers of assistance and supervision during the arbitral process may be excessive.

The Commission believes that the reform of the Arbitration Act, No. 42 of 1965 should be considered in order to create an effective legislative framework for the resolution of international trade disputes. In this process consideration should be given to the Model Law which was adopted by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) on 21 June 1985. It provides a framework within which international arbitration can be conducted with a minimum degree of judicial intervention and a significant degree of party autonomy.

On 29 November 1996 the Commission's Working Committee approved the publication of a discussion paper on International Commercial Arbitration for general information and comment. In this discussion paper a holistic approach to international arbitration legislation is adopted. It includes South Africa's response to the Model Law; possible changes to the legislation on the New York Convention (currently set out in Act No. 40 of 1977); and the proposed accession by South Africa to the Washington Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes between States and Nationals of Other States. The paper includes draft legislation with a commentary.

The issues raised in the discussion paper need to be debated thoroughly. Based on the outcome of such discussions a report, containing proposed legislation, will be submitted to the Minister of Justice. The comments of all parties which feel that they have an interest in this topic or may be affected by the type of measures discussed in this paper are therefore of vital importance to the Commission. All respondents are invited to indicate whether there are other issues that must be explored. All likely to be affected by possible legislation should participate in this debate.

Written comments or suggestions should reach the Commission by 31 March 1997 at the address given below.

The discussion paper is obtainable free of charge from the Commission on request.

SCHEDULE

GREEN PAPER: POLICY PROPOSALS FOR A NEW PUBLIC SERVICE STATUTE

CHAPTER ONE

INTRODUCTION AND OVERVIEW OF PUBLIC SERVICE TRANSFORMATION

1.1 INTRODUCTION

The Department for the Public Service and Administration is publishing a Green Paper entitled "A New Law for a New Public Service: Policy Proposals for a New Public Service Statute".

The transformation of the public service is one of the key challenges facing a democratic South Africa. This process has already led to significant changes in the operation of the public sector, some of which are detailed in the course of the Green Paper. The White Paper on the Transformation of the Public Service ("the White Paper") was published in November 1995 to serve as a broad framework of government policy during the process of transformation and reform. This Green Paper seeks to implement that framework.

The adoption of the New Constitution has given further impetus to the transformation and reform of the public service. The Constitution establishes the basic values and principles governing public administration, a concept that includes the public service,¹ and mandates Parliament to enact national legislation regulating aspects of the public service.

The laws that currently regulate the operation of the public service reflect outdated and discredited notions of the operation and functioning of government and are obstacles to reform and transformation. These laws are not consistent with the New Constitution. In addition, the provisions in the Public Service Act that regulate employment within the public service also conflict with the major changes that have taken place in the labour laws that also regulate the public service.

¹ The text of Chapter 10 of the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa (as adopted by the Constitutional Assembly on 8 May 1996 and as amended on 11 October 1996) is contained in Appendix One.

- 1.5 The Green Paper makes proposals and discusses options for the development of new public service legislation to give effect to the values and principles reflected in the Constitution and to enable the continued transformation of the public service.
- 1.6 The purpose of the Green Paper is to promote debate on the development of the law in public administration. To facilitate debate on these proposals, the Green Paper describes the main problems in the public service and the legislative framework that governs it. The Green Paper concentrates on a key aspect of transformation of the public sector—the creation of appropriate enabling legislation. Those who wish to gain a broader understanding of the issues underlying the transformation are referred to the White Paper.

2. PUBLIC SECTOR TRANSFORMATION

- 2.1 The White Paper on the Transformation of the Public Service lists the following problems in the public service as it has been managed:
 - ▶ poor service delivery;
 - ▶ centralised control and top-down (hierarchical) management structures;
 - ▶ lack of accountability and transparency;
 - ▶ the absence of effective management and low productivity;
 - ▶ the persistence of a rule-bound, rather than a goal-orientated culture.
- 2.2 The public service legislative framework which includes the Public Service Act and the Public Service Commission Act, the Public Service Regulations and the Public Service Staff Code reflects and perpetuates it, in that:
 - 2.2.1 Control in the public sector is centralised; managers in different departments, organisational components and provincial administrations that comprise the public sector have little or no autonomy or responsibility to make decisions that affect their specific departmental needs;
 - 2.2.2 within the departments and administrations control is centralised; even where decision-making power is delegated in terms of existing legislation, the legal responsibility for decisions remains with the highest level;
 - 2.2.3 the responsibility of public sector managers is to ensure that employees comply with the complex set of rules and regulations rather than concentrating on the quality of output and service delivery; and
 - 2.2.4 the legislative framework does not contain provisions that allow for the effective monitoring of performance or assessing merit, and the basis is not created for the development of appropriate human resource development programs.
- 2.3 Cumulatively, these patterns are a significant barrier to effective public service transformation. The public service legislative framework is neither in keeping with the reforms that have already been implemented, nor is it an appropriate vehicle for further transformation.
- 2.4 The legal framework governing the public service promotes the observance of detailed rules rather than the delivery of services and societal development as the driving force of public service culture. It disempowers the public and employees and managers within the public service. Members of the public are powerless to challenge poor delivery of public services or to take action to improve services; employees are not encouraged to, or rewarded for, working productively, and managers are not able to take decisive actions to improve the quality of performance of their employees and the institutions they manage.
- 2.5 Major changes have also taken place in the legal environment within which the public sector operates. South Africa has entered a new Constitutional era. The Final Constitution contains a vision for the operation of the public service which differs, not only from that of apartheid South Africa, but also from that of the Interim Constitution. The Constitution mandates Parliament to enact legislation to regulate important aspects of the public service. New public service legislation must satisfy the requirements of this mandate. The coming into effect of the Labour Relations Act, 1995 (Act No. 66 of 1995) dramatically transforms the labour and employment context in which the public service operates. The public and private sectors are now regulated by a single set of over-arching values. This requires a reconsideration of the Public Service Act regulating the employment and conditions of employment of public service employees.
- 2.6 Two central themes underlie the legislative changes that are proposed in this Green Paper:
 - 2.6.1 Replacing the excessive centralism of the current system of public administration with an approach that permits maximum departmental autonomy and managerial responsibility within a coherent national public service; and
 - 2.6.2 replacing a rule-bound culture of work with one that is goal-orientated and promotes efficiency, development and the effective delivery of services.
- 2.7 The Green Paper therefore explores the development of enabling legislation which establishes appropriate mechanisms and structures for—
 - 2.7.1 the creation of broad policies on the employment, deployment and development of human resources which will set the parameters for managers, within the different sectors of the public service, to operate;
 - 2.7.2 the development of a (decentralised) management system, in which the responsibility and capacity to make decisions is devolved to the most appropriate levels of management;

- 2.7.3 the creation of a systematic approach to accountability in which indicators are developed for measuring, monitoring and evaluating the quality of performance of institutions and employees; and
- 2.7.4 the creation of mechanisms for the public to address issues and complaints concerning the delivery of services and through which public perception of service delivery and public service performance can be measured.

Items 2.7.1 and 2.7.2 are discussed in Chapter Three; Items 2.7.3 and 2.7.4 in Chapter Four.

3. THE VALUES AND PRINCIPLES OF PUBLIC SERVICE ADMINISTRATION

- 3.1 Chapter 10 of the new Constitution establishes the basic values and principles governing public administration. "Public administration" includes administration in every sphere of government, organs of state as well as in public enterprises. The public service is a part of the public administration.
- 3.2 All institutions that form part of public administration, including the public service must comply with a set of values and principles laid down in the Constitution—
 - ▶ the promotion and maintenance of a high standard of professional ethics;
 - ▶ the promotion of efficient, economic and effective use of resources;
 - ▶ a development orientation;
 - ▶ services must be provided impartially, fairly, equitably and without bias;
 - ▶ the public service must be responsive to the needs of people;
 - ▶ the public must be encouraged to participate in policy making;
 - ▶ there must be accountability;
 - ▶ transparency must be fostered through providing the public with timely, accessible and accurate information;
 - ▶ good human resource management and career development practices must be cultivated to maximise human potential;
 - ▶ public administration must be broadly representative of South African people;
 - ▶ employment and personnel management practices must be based on ability, objectivity, fairness and the need to address the imbalances of the past to achieve broad representation.
- 3.3 Parliament must enact legislation to give effect to these values and principles in every sphere of public administration. This legislation may differentiate between the different spheres of public administration. The legislation proposed in this Green Paper seeks to ensure that the public service is administered in accordance with these Constitutional principles. The guidelines, parameters and standards that are developed in terms of the Act will also assist other institutions within other spheres of public administration, such as public enterprises and parastatals, to develop systems of governance that meet their constitutional obligations.
- 3.4 Public service legislation is one of several laws that have been enacted or are being developed to give effect to these principles. For instance, the Green Paper on Employment Equity promotes the representivity of the public administration. Legislation in this regard will require all employers, including the public service, to undertake organisational audits and prepare and implement employment equity plans. The Open Democracy Bill will promote public service accountability by regulating the right of the public to have access to records of governmental bodies.
- 3.5 The Constitution also provides that the public service must loyally execute the lawful policies of the Government of the day and that the function and structure of the public service must be established by national legislation. The laws proposed by this Green Paper are developed to fulfil this mandate. Chapter 10 of the Constitution establishes an independent Public Service Commission and sets out its powers and functions. The operation of the Commission must be regulated by national legislation. The operation of the Commission is discussed in Chapters 3 and 4. The Constitution also stipulates that national legislation must regulate—
 - 3.5.1 the appointment of persons to the public service on policy considerations;
 - 3.5.2 the terms and conditions of employment in the public service; and
 - 3.5.3 the rights of employees to a fair pension.

4. THE VISION AND MISSION OF THE NEW PUBLIC SERVICE

The White Paper sets the vision and mission of the public service—

Vision

"The Government of National Unity is committed to continually improve the lives of the people of South Africa through a transformed public service which is representative, coherent, transparent, efficient, effective, accountable and responsive to the needs of all."

Mission The creation of a people centred and people driven public service which is characterised by equity, quality, timeousness and a strong code of ethics.

"The creation of a people centred and people driven public service which is characterised by equity, quality, timeousness and a strong code of ethics."

The vision and mission are consistent with the values and principles of public administration in the Constitution. Current legislation and future legislation must be evaluated in the light of capacity to promote these goals.

CHAPTER TWO

5. SCOPE OF THE NEW LEGISLATION

5.1 Challenge

The operation of the public service is regulated through several different pieces of legislation. Separate laws, for instance, exist for the education sector, the police services and local government. Consequently different rules have been developed regarding their organisational and human resource policies. This has lead to a duplication of functions and the inconsistent application of policies. In addition, it has had the result that employees who do similar work have different terms and conditions of employment which is unfair and is the source of labour unrest.

5.2 Discussion

5.2.1 The policy of the government, as set out in both the Reconstruction and Development Programme (RDP) White Paper and the White Paper on the Transformation of the Public Service, is to develop, inter alia—

- (a) harmonious and contemporary standards for employment and human resource practices which will support greater flexibility of movement and transferability, thereby allowing greater labour market flexibility and cross-fertilisation between different economic components; and
- (b) the development of simple legislation which establishes a clear set of principles and parameters which are easily understandable and within which all departments and institutions may operate.

5.2.2 The enabling statute should organise the structure of the public service and give effect to the core values of the public service. Each department will have the capacity to develop its own management systems within the policies developed under this statute. A single enabling law should therefore cover the entire public service including those sectors that have historically had different legislative frameworks in relation to employment practices.

5.2.3 By incorporating all the sectors of the public service (educators, police, defence, correctional services etc.) under the same legislation there will be greater harmony in the way in which human resources are organised, and by modernising these practices there will necessarily be greater labour market flexibility.

5.2.4 All organisations that fall within public administration must comply with the values and principles contained in the Constitution and that are set out above. These include local government, Parliament and the parastatals. As is pointed out in the previous section, the standards developed under public service legislation will offer guidelines for the development of effective and appropriate managerial systems for these organisations.

5.3 Proposal

- 5.3.1 This legislation should cover all employees in institutions that form part of South Africa's public service. This should include the public service, education service, police services, and the defence force services.
- 5.3.2 The legislation will permit institutions to develop managerial systems in accordance with best practices that are suited to their specific needs, while operating within the overall policy framework for the public service. How this will be achieved is set out in the next Chapter.

CHAPTER THREE

6. POLICIES, STANDARDS AND PARAMETERS

6.1 Challenge

- 6.1.1 The current legislative framework has contributed to a public service that it is over-regulated and under-managed. This disempowers managers and has resulted in inadequate managerial control in all levels of public service institutions. The consequences of this include poor and delayed service delivery, disincentives for efficient and effective work and high levels of complacency and corruption among personnel.
- 6.1.2 The transformation of the public service requires that the limited resources, including human resources, at the disposal of government for the supply and maintenance of the public service are utilised in the most effective and efficient manner. Public service legislation must create the basis for the effective use of human resources.

6.2 Discussion

- 6.2.1 The current regulatory framework that organises the public service must be examined in the light of this challenge.

The Public Service Act and the Public Service Commission Act

The Public Service Act and the Public Service Commission Act lay the basis for the management of human resources within the public service. The Public Service Commission (Commission) has the power to make recommendations and issue directions on all aspects of employment, personnel practices and conditions of service within the public service². Its functions cover the development, implementation and evaluation of policy throughout the public service and its recommendations and directives are binding on the entire public service. The Commission's powers extend to decision-making, organisation and administration of all institutions within the public service, the conditions of service of employees and personnel practices, including appointments, promotion and transfer, termination of service and inefficiency and misconduct.

The glomeration of these powers in the Commission is hampering public service transformation because—

- (a) it is inappropriate to locate the power to develop, implement and evaluate policy within a single institution; and
- (b) the Commission establishes norms applicable to the entire public service. Accordingly, there is very little autonomy within the departments to administer and develop their human resources in the manner which most suits their specific needs.

- 6.2.3 The New Constitution reflects a considerably revised approach to the powers and functions of the Commission. The Constitution requires a separation of the advisory and investigative functions of the Commission from executive responsibility and decision-making powers. It also envisions the functioning of a more decentralised public sector in which Departments and other public sector institutions have greater scope to devolve power internally and determine their own personnel procedures. The role of the Commission in respect of personnel procedures will be limited to a monitoring function to ensure that the procedures comply with the Constitution³.

The Public Service Regulations and the Public Service Staff Code

The Staff Code and the Regulations set out, in detail, the procedures for the management of human resources. These cover recruitment, promotion, merit appraisal, grievance procedures, disciplinary procedures and conditions of service, which includes the salaries and other benefits that public service employees are entitled to. Departments cannot deviate from the methods and procedures set out in the Staff Code and Regulations. The Staff Codes are complex, detailed and, in many instances, inconsistent.

The Personnel Administrative Standards (PAS).

The PAS is an elaborate grading system covering all work performed in the public sector. It describes in detail approximately 350 job categories and sets out qualifications, type of work and locates the employee within the public sector hierarchy. This applies to all Departments within the public service. Prior to the establishment of collective bargaining within the public service, conditions of employment and renumeration were determined for each of the 350 levels.

- 6.2.6 A new public service grading system was negotiated during the 1996 wage negotiations. This compresses the salaries of the 350 job categories into sixteen bands on the basis of qualifications and skill level. This will greatly facilitate the conduct of public sector wage negotiations and permit greater equity in the determination of public sector wages. It is the start of a process to develop a fully fledged skills-based grading system, as contemplated in the White Paper, which is essential for the skilling of public sector employees and effective work organisation.

² The centralisation of the powers to develop, implement and evaluate policy in the Public Service Commission is reflected in the Interim Constitution.

³ This process of reform has commenced. The Cabinet has approved draft amendments to the Public Service Act to transfer certain of the Commission's power to the Minister for the Public Service and Administration.

6.2.7 The current regulatory framework permits little scope for efficient and effective decision-making within the public service. A wide range of routine decisions must either be referred outside of a Department to the Public Service Commission or to the highest authority within a Department. As a result, managers are unable to, and do not, take responsibility for the effective management of their departments. This results in lengthy delays which have the result of undermining the quality of services. Organisational systems within the public service and within Departments reflect this hierarchical structure. As a result financial management systems, information systems and service provision systems are unwieldy and hinder innovation or creativity within the public service.

6.3 Proposal

The proposed legislation must establish the procedure for the development and articulation of policies and standards within which the public service must operate. These powers will be exercised by the Minister for the Public Service and Administration (the Minister). The legislation must also lay the basis for the devolution of power in the public service in a manner that is consistent with a coherent and integrated public service and establish the processes for devolving power to Departments and within Departments.

6.3.1 Powers of the Minister for the Public Service and Administration

The Minister shall create policies to serve as best management practices within which managers in the departments, provinces and institutions must operate. These policies will clearly articulate government policy. These policies and proposals will be contained in Regulations and will include—

- (a) the management framework for the creation of posts. The framework would stipulate the portion of the budget that may be spent on all posts and establish guidelines as to how departments may organize their human resources;
- (b) guidelines on how decision-making power and responsibility is to be devolved to the different levels of management within public service institutions;
- (c) how to determine the size of the management echelon and what portion of the budget should be spent on this section of employees;
- (d) the contracts of employment for the management echelon, which may link continued employment and promotion to satisfactory performance;
- (e) recruitment and appointment procedures to ensure that vacancies are filled on the basis of skills, competence and equity;
- (f) methods of tailoring training to the needs of the department, provincial administration or institution;
- (g) techniques for assessing and evaluating performance;
- (h) recognizing achievement for promotion;
- (i) guidelines for financial and information technology systems;
- (j) a code of good practice for disciplinary, grievance and other personnel procedures; and
- (k) criteria for the application of a skills-based grading system to a particular public service institution.

6.3.2 Allocation of powers to and within Departments

The legislation will set out the different levels of power and establish the procedures in terms of which managerial responsibility may be devolved. In this regard—

- (a) the executing authority (the Minister appointed by the President to assume the executive authority for the operation of a Department or agency) and the head of every department will have the power to determine how their departments are to be organised internally. The exercise of these powers will be constrained by the standards and parameters established by the Minister. A Department will have to apply the best management practices, as set out in the Regulations, in developing their departments; and
- (b) managers within Departments may be granted the authority to organise and perform all aspects of the management of their institutions. The precise nature of this devolution of power will depend on factors that include the structure of the Department, the size and number of institutions, the number of persons employed, the type of services to be delivered, the number of people to whom services are delivered and the geographical location of the institution. This devolution of power must take place within the guidelines set out in the regulations.

CHAPTER FOUR

7. ACCOUNTABILITY FOR PERFORMANCE

7.1 Challenge

7.1.1 The legislative framework for the public service encourages a culture of complacency in that employees have little or no responsibility for the quality of their performance or that of their institution and little opportunity for development. This in turn results in low levels of job satisfaction and leads to inefficiency and corruption.

7.1.2 The public service suffers from a lack of legitimacy. There are no accessible mechanisms for the public to challenge the quality of, or access to services that are delivered to them. Public servants are not accountable to those to whom they provide services.

7.1.3 While public service institutions will acquire greater autonomy, their enhanced powers will be exercised as part of a coherent public service. Mechanisms will have to be introduced to ensure that departments, provincial administrations and other institutions do not ignore or violate the Constitution and other government policies concerning public administration.

7.2 Discussion

7.2.1 A culture of complacency has developed in the public service. Public service employees are not accountable for the quality or value of the work they perform. They have been employed in a rule-bound service which lacks the mechanisms to measure the quality of performance and to encourage or reward the provision of improved services. Public service employment, while offering a high level of protection and security, requires little or no responsibility and in many cases affords limited job satisfaction, little opportunity for personal development and low remuneration in comparison to equivalent employment in the private sector.

7.2.2 A range of reforms will be required to shift the focus from compliance with norms to the measurement of quality of work and services supplied. This will acquire appropriate human resources development and skilling, reward systems that recognise outstanding merit and the development of criteria to measure the quality of service delivery. The measures will have to be adopted both in respect of the performance of individual employees and of institutions within the public service.

7.2.3 The public service is presently suffering from a crisis, not only of identity and direction, but of legitimacy. Public service employees are seen by the majority of South Africans as being the agents of apartheid. This is exacerbated by the fact that the system of service delivery has been, and in many instances still is, exclusive, discriminatory and unchallengeable. This crisis can only be eradicated if public service employees become accountable to the public.

7.2.4 Greater accountability must be achieved. First, the public service must be accountable to those whom it serves for the quality of the service provided. Secondly, the public service must develop mechanisms to ensure that services are provided effectively and efficiently. This requires a significant shift in the approach to the evaluation of the performance of employees.

7.2.5 Two fundamental rights in the Constitution impact on the achievement of greater accountability. The public is entitled to access to any information that is held by the state and administrative actions that are lawful, reasonable and procedurally fair. National legislation must be enacted to give effect to these rights. At present there are no mechanisms in place which ensure that members of the public can obtain any information required for the exercise or protection of their rights and no mechanisms to challenge inappropriate service delivery.

7.2.6 The Open Democracy Bill has been prepared to give effect to the rights of access to information. Subject to certain restrictions, this legislation will compel the public administration to supply information to the public. Legislation must also ensure that the requirements of administrative justice are met. While these innovations are crucial steps to achieving greater accountability, they are not in themselves a complete answer. Accountability will only be achieved if the mechanisms created are realistically accessible to ordinary citizens who may have complaints or grievances concerning the supply of public services. Most members of the public are not in a position to institute litigation, nor will legal proceedings offer an effective remedy for articulating their dissatisfaction. Appropriate and simple procedures that allow for the articulation of grievances, without costs to the grievant, are required.

7.2.7 The transformation of the public service will need to be accompanied by the development of mechanisms to ensure that Departments operate efficiently and effectively and that managers to whom powers have been devolved exercise those powers appropriately. This will require the introduction of mechanisms to monitor and evaluate performance as well as for making recommendations to revise or improve performance or procedures. Public service managers in the different institutions and departments must be held accountable for the way in which they manage so as to ensure that the policy of the government and the effectiveness of the public service is not undermined. While the institution with the primary responsibility for these functions is the Public Service Commission, a significant role will have to be accorded to other institutions including the relevant Parliamentary Portfolio Committees.

7.2.8 The devolution of autonomy to Departments and institutions carries a reciprocal duty to provide regular detailed information to the Commission and Minister for the Public Service and Administration as to how the best management practice codes have been implemented.

7.3 Proposals

7.3.1 Legislation must provide for the creation of mechanisms which will ensure that employees in the public service become accountable to the public in all respects.

The Minister will be able to create by regulation, the following:

- Standards for service delivery;
- a mechanism for the measurement of delivery targets and the quantification of what actual levels of service delivery are;
- a mechanism to measure public response to the quality and quantity of the service delivery in the different departments, provinces and institutions; and
- a grievance procedure for the public, which is accessible, quick and which could result in enforceable disciplinary action, which may be utilized to challenge or complain about the actions of public service employees.

7.3.2 The Public Service Commission is empowered by the Constitution to investigate and evaluate the organisation, administration and personnel procedures of the public service. Legislation is required to give effect to this process. The elements of the monitoring process should include—

- (a) the publication by the Commission/Minister of guidelines concerning best management practice;
- (b) an obligation on Departments to submit copies of their management plans and personnel and other procedures to the Commission;
- (c) an obligation on Departments to supply other information when requested by the Commission or Minister;
- (d) the power of the Commission to monitor and investigate the performance of Departments;
- (e) the power of the Commission to evaluate and make recommendations concerning the management plans and procedures adopted by Departments;
- (f) an obligation on the Commission to report regularly to the relevant Parliamentary Portfolio Committee and to the National Assembly.

CHAPTER FIVE—EMPLOYMENT

8. CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT AND DISCIPLINE

8.1 Challenge

The extension of modern labour legislation to the public service has resulted in a conflict between labour legislation which is based on equity and the provisions of the public service legislative framework that regulates employment in the public service in a manner that is rule based, archaic and rigid. This undermines the efficacy of management within the public sector as decisions have to meet the criteria of conflicting paradigms.

8.2 Discussion

8.2.1 From 11 November 1996, in line with the government's policy of harmonisation of labour laws, the new Labour Relations Act will also regulate labour relations in the public service. This is the first time a single law has regulated labour relations in both the public and private sectors. The Labour Relations Act will replace the seriously flawed Public Service Labour Relations Act and the Education Labour Relations Act, which in 1993 extended aspects of labour law, including collective bargaining and the unfair labour practice to the public service for the first time. Since 1993, the public service has been exposed, and has had to adjust, to developments in labour law and labour relations that the private sector had been experiencing since 1979.

8.2.2 In the area of dismissal, the 1995 Labour Relations Act (the LRA) significantly advances these reforms by codifying the law of unfair dismissal. Corresponding changes have not yet been effected in the laws regulating the public service.

8.2.3 The employment-related provisions in the Public Service Act entrench complex and highly technical procedures for aspects of employment including promotion, the exercise of discipline and dismissal. Until April 1996 these provisions entrenched gross racial discrimination in public service employment. The Act gave extremely high levels of security of employment to officers (predominantly white). Most black workers, on the other hand, were employed without security of employment and with inferior terms and conditions of employment and work-related benefits.

8.2.4 Public service managers have to measure their actions in the area of employment against four sets of legal criteria: The Constitution; the principles of administrative law; the detailed rules and procedures of the Public Service Act and its codes and regulations and the equity-based criteria of unfair dismissal and the unfair labour practice. The requirements established by the Public Service Act may at times conflict with the criteria of equity. This stultifies employment policy in the public sector.

8.2.5 The enactment of the LRA removes the necessity for detailed provisions concerning employment contained in the Public Service Act. Security of employment must now be protected in a manner that is consistent with the equity-based approach of the LRA. The public service can now afford greater autonomy to Departments in the regulation of employment and the exercise of discipline. The Constitution empowers the Commission to give directions aimed at ensuring that personnel procedures relating to recruitment, transfers, promotions and dismissals comply with the values and principles set out in s.195 (of the Constitution). Departments will be able to adopt, develop and implement their procedures provided that they comply with the Constitution, any guidelines issued by the Minister, the provisions of the Labour Relations Act and any collective bargaining agreements concluded in the Public Service Bargaining Councils.

8.2.6 A number of other labour statutes will impact upon the public service. The Green Paper on Employment Standards proposes that a single law should establish a set of minimum employment standards applicable to both the private and the public sector. These standards may be varied in accordance with the needs of the public service, the particular sector or the specific department or institution by collective bargaining in the relevant Public Service Bargaining Council at central, sectoral or departmental level. The Green Paper on Employment Equity proposes government departments, like all other employers, will have to prepare employment equity plans to achieve and maintain a representative public service.

8.3 Proposals

Legislation will require Departments and other institutions within the public service to establish grievance procedures and disciplinary procedures that are in accordance with the LRA and the Constitution.

9. COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

9.1 Challenge

The centralisation of the public service means that virtually all collective bargaining on conditions of employment takes place in the Public Service Co-ordinating Bargaining Council. Terms and conditions of employment for all employees, including the management echelon, are determined in the Co-ordinating Bargaining Council in the same set of negotiations.

9.2 Discussion

9.2.1 The Labour Relations Act, in addition to laying down basic organisational rights for employees and employers, establishes mechanisms for collective bargaining and the resolution of disputes, which include, for dispute of interest, strikes, lockouts and an Essential Services Committee, and, in relation to disputes of right, the referral of disputes to the CCMA for mediation or arbitration.

9.2.2 The model for collective bargaining in the public sector is established by the Labour Relations Act, 1995. Negotiations on matters that are regulated by rules, norms or standards that apply across the public service or on terms and conditions of employment that apply to more than one Department must be conducted in the Public Service Co-ordinating Bargaining Council. The President may establish bargaining councils for any sector of the public service or the Co-ordinating Bargaining Council may designate a sector for the establishment of a bargaining council. Sectoral bargaining councils already exist for the education sector and the police services. The granting of greater autonomy to Departments will permit a wider range of issues to be negotiated inside particular government departments.

9.2.3 Negotiations are conducted mainly by the Department of Public Service and Administration to create national norms and Departments and provinces are not fully integrated into the bargaining process.

9.3 Proposal

9.3.1 The operation of the Public Sector Co-ordinating Bargaining Council will have to be stream-lined to maintain the coherence of a centralised bargaining process but permit an active role for departments in the determination of conditions of employment. The government will first seek to achieve these goals through agreements with the trade unions in the public sector.

9.3.2 An efficient bargaining structure should be created to achieve this without fragmenting the unitary centralised system encouraged in the Labour Relations Act. Framework agreements on terms and conditions of employment will have to be negotiated in the Co-ordinating Bargaining Council to set the maximum and minimum range of terms and conditions of employment. The implementation of the framework agreements can then be negotiated at sectoral or departmental level in accordance with the needs of the specific department or sector. The agreements reached in the Co-ordinating Bargaining Council will be published in the Staff Code and revised annually.

9.3.3 Departments and provinces will be required to supply information on the manner in which these agreements are implemented at departmental, provincial and institutional level.

9.3.4 Senior management will be excluded from the bargaining unit and alternative methods for the determination of their terms and conditions of employment will be created.

10. APPOINTMENT OF PERSONS ON THE GROUNDS OF POLICY

10.1 Challenge

10.1.1 Section 195 (4) of the new Constitution states that legislation must regulate the appointment of persons employed in public service on the grounds of policy considerations. At present persons who are appointed by the State as advisers are regulated solely in terms of their contracts of employment which are determined by Cabinet.

10.2 Discussion

10.2.1 The new Constitution accepts that persons employed in public administration will perform their duties impartially and will loyally execute the policies of the Government of the day.

10.2.2 There is, however, a need for the executing authorities and heads of department to employ advisers for—

- (a) devising policy that will entrench and promote the policy of the government, these advisers will therefore not be impartial or independent; and
- (b) their special skills which are necessary for the development of specialised policies.

10.3 Proposal

The legislation should enable executing authorities and heads of department to employ persons on policy grounds, within certain parameters which include—

- 10.3.1 the types of contact that the executing authorities and heads of department may enter into;
- 10.3.2 the minimum and maximum duration of these contracts; and
- 10.3.3 how terms and conditions of employment for advisers are determined.

CHAPTER SIX

11. IMPLEMENTATION AND TRANSITION

11.1 Challenge

- 11.1.1 For the reasons outlined in the Green Paper, many public sector managers lack the training and skills to implement new management systems and to assume the enhanced responsibility and autonomy that are a central feature of these proposals.
- 11.1.2 For these reasons, to avoid a short-term detrimental impact on service delivery, these proposals will have to be implemented incrementally.
- 11.1.3 The Code of Best Management Practices will be developed by the Minister for the Public Service and Administration. This process will include widespread consultation with all stakeholders both inside and outside the public service.
- 11.1.4 The Public Service Staff Code and Regulations, as well as the PAS's, have the status of agreements concluded by the Bargaining Chamber, in so far as they relate to matters of mutual interest between the employer and employees. The Government will seek to revise the Code and Regulations through negotiations, prior to its cancellation.

11.2 Discussion

- 11.2.1 A radical transformation of the public service, as described in the White Paper, is required to achieve legitimacy for the public service. Yet the manner in which the transformation is implemented can itself have an adverse impact upon the public service and the quality of its performance. Decision-making, for instance, cannot be devolved until those recipients of that power are able to exercise it in accordance with government policies. An incomplete transformation or a decline in the quality of services may lead to public disillusionment.
- 11.2.2 Appropriate procedures will have to be put in place to ensure that public service institutions are empowered to implement the new managerial systems. All departments, provincial administrations and institutions will be required to prepare plans as to how they propose to develop the skills and capacity required for effective decentralisation. These plans will be lodged with the Department of Public Service and Administration who will evaluate the plans and discuss them with the specific departments, provinces and institutions.
- 11.2.3 The impact of the legislation will be phased-in so that departments, provincial administrations and institutions can assume control and responsibility at different times. This will depend on their capacity to assume the new responsibilities. In this regard managers will be regularly evaluated, in accordance with their own plans and objective criteria developed by the Department of Public Service and Administration and the Public Service Commission, to assess the progress that is being made.
- 11.2.4 Intensive management training will be provided so that managers can develop in accordance with the needs of their department, provincial administration or institution and towards the goals set out in this document and the White Paper.
- 11.2.5 The Department of Public Service and Administration will, in conjunction with advisers in the private sector and other public services, draft a Code of Best Management Practices.
- 11.2.6 All documents that form part of the legislative framework regulating the public service (including the Staff Code, the Regulations and the PAS's) will be revised to be consistent with the approach envisaged in the Green Paper.
- 11.2.7 An extensive program of consultation must be set up involving all stakeholders so as to ensure broad participation in the further development of the proposals contained in the Green Paper.

11.3 Proposals

The process of the development of new public service legislation will include—

- 11.3.1 extensive consultations with stakeholders;
- 11.3.2 the development of appropriate training for those responsible for implementing the new system;
- 11.3.3 the development of time-tables for the phased implementation of new managerial systems;
- 11.3.4 the systematic review of all aspects of the public service legislative framework.

12. THE PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF CODE AND REGULATIONS

The Regulations to be published in the Government Gazette, will contain a CODE OF BEST MANAGEMENT PRACTICES relating to, inter alia, the following:

- 12.1 Organisational design.
- 12.2 Human resource policy; including performance management, merit appraisal, achievement based promotion and performance contracts for the management echelon.
- 12.3 Information technology policy.
- 12.4 Organisational development policy.
- 12.5 Income and budgetary policy to assist departments and institutions to design their budgets in accordance with the budget and the needs of the department.

- 12.6 A Code of Good Practice to assist departments and institutions to develop grievance and disciplinary procedures.
- 12.7 Training and staff development.
- 12.8 A citizens charter.
- 12.9 A code of conduct for public service employees.
- 12.10 Effective and efficient bargaining arrangements.
- 12.11 Practical examples of suitable managerial instruments available for departmental, provincial and institutional use.

The PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF CODE will contain all the agreements regarding terms and conditions of employment that are reached in the Public Service Co-ordinating Bargaining Council. It shall be revised annually as agreements are changed, updated or modified. This code shall be published in the Government Gazette.

6. EIGHTH SCHEDULE:

That the following new Eighth Schedule be inserted after the Seventh Schedule of the Rules of the Society:

"EIGHTH SCHEDULE
INTERNATIONAL CODE OF ETHICS
RULES

1. A lawyer who undertakes professional work in a jurisdiction where he is not a full member of the local profession shall adhere to the standards of professional ethics in the jurisdiction in which he has been admitted. He shall also observe all ethical standards which apply to lawyers of the country where he is working.

2. Lawyers shall at all times maintain the honour and dignity of their profession.

They shall, in practice as well as in private life, abstain from any behaviour which may tend to discredit the profession of which they are members.

3. Lawyers shall preserve independence in the discharge of their professional duty.

Lawyers practising on their own account, or in partnership, where permissible, shall not engage in any other business or occupation, if by doing so, they may cease to be independent.

4. Lawyers shall treat their professional colleagues with the utmost courtesy and fairness.

Lawyers who undertake to render assistance to a foreign colleague shall always keep in mind that the foreign colleague has to depend on them to a much larger extent than in the case of another lawyer of the same country. Therefore their responsibility is much greater, both when giving advice, and when handling a case.

For this reason it is improper for lawyers to accept a case unless they can handle it promptly and with due competence, without undue interference by the pressure of other work. To the fees in these cases Rule 19 applies.

5. Except where the law or custom of the country concerned otherwise requires, any oral or written communication between lawyers shall in principle be accorded a confidential character as far as the Court is concerned, unless certain promises or acknowledgements are made therein on behalf of a client.

6. Lawyers shall always maintain due respect towards the Court. Lawyers shall without fear defend the interests of their clients and without regard to any unpleasant consequences to themselves or to any other person.

Lawyers shall never knowingly give to the Court incorrect information or advice which is to their knowledge contrary to the law.

7. It shall be considered improper for lawyers to communicate about a particular case directly with any person whom they know to be represented in that case by another lawyer without the latter's consent.

8. A lawyer should not advertise or solicit business except to the extent and in the manner permitted by the rules of the jurisdiction to which that lawyer is subject. A lawyer should not advertise or solicit business in any country in which such advertising or soliciting is prohibited.
9. A lawyer should never consent to handle a case unless:
 - (a) the client gives direct instructions, or,
 - (b) the case is assigned by a competent body or forwarded by another lawyer, or
 - (c) instructions are given in any other manner permissible under the relevant local rules or regulations.
10. Lawyers shall at all times give clients a candid opinion on any case. They shall render assistance with scrupulous care and diligence. This applies also if they are assigned as counsel for an indigent person. Lawyers shall at any time be free to refuse to handle a case, unless it is assigned by a competent body. Lawyers should only withdraw from a case during its course for good cause, and if possible in such a manner that the client's interests are not adversely affected. The loyal defence of a client's case may never cause lawyers to be other than perfectly candid, subject to any right or privilege to the contrary which clients choose them to exercise, or knowingly to go against the law.
11. Lawyers shall, when in the client's interest, endeavour to reach a solution by settlement out of Court rather than start legal proceedings. Lawyers should never stir up litigation.
12. Lawyers should not acquire a financial interest in the subject matter of a case which they are conducting. Neither should they directly or indirectly, acquire property about which litigation is pending before the Court in which they practice.
13. Lawyers should never represent conflicting interests in litigation. In non-litigation matters, lawyers should do so only after having disclosed all conflicts or possible conflicts of interest to all parties concerned and only with their consent. This Rule also applies to all lawyers in a firm.
14. Lawyers should never disclose, unless lawfully ordered to do so by the Court or as required by Statute, what has been communicated to them in their capacity as lawyers even after they have ceased to be the client's counsel. This duty extends to their partners, to junior lawyers assisting them and to their employees.

15. In pecuniary matters lawyers shall be most punctual and diligent.

They should never mingle funds of others with their own and they should at all times be able to refund money they hold for others.

They shall not retain money they receive for their clients for longer than is absolutely necessary.

16. Lawyers may require that a deposit is made to cover their expenses, but the deposit should be in accordance with the estimated amount of their charges and the probable expenses and labour required.

17. Lawyers shall never forget that they should put first, not their right to compensation for their services, but the interests of their clients and the exigencies of the administration of justice.

The lawyer's right to ask for a deposit or to demand payment of out-of-pocket expenses and commitments, failing payment of which they may withdraw from the case or refuse to handle it, should never be exercised at a moment at which the client may be unable to find other assistance in time to prevent irreparable damage being done.

Lawyers' fees should, in the absence or non-applicability of official scales, be fixed on a consideration of the amount involved in the controversy and the interest of it to the client, the time and labour involved and all other personal and factual circumstances of the case.

18. A contract for a contingent fee, where sanctioned by the law or by professional rules and practice, should be reasonable under all circumstances of the case, including the risk and uncertainty of the compensation and subject to supervision of a Court as to its reasonableness.

19. Lawyers who engage a foreign colleague to advise on a case or to co-operate in handling it, are responsible for the payment of the latter's charges, except express agreement to the contrary. When lawyers direct a client to a foreign colleague they are not responsible for the payment of the latter's charges, but neither are they entitled to a share of the fee of this foreign colleague.

20. Lawyers should not permit their professional services or their names to be used in any way which would make it possible for persons to practise law who are not legally authorised to do so.

Lawyers shall not delegate to a legally unqualified person not in their employ and control any functions which are by the law or custom of the country in which they practise only to be performed by a qualified lawyer.

21. It is not unethical for lawyers to limit or exclude professional liability subject to the Rules of their local Bar Association, and to there being no statutory or constitutional prohibitions."
