Draft NHC Language Policy

1. PREAMBLE AND SCOPE

The right to use own languages is enshrined and guaranteed by the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa. Since the dawn of democracy in 1994 South Africa has always grappled with the issue of languages and usage thereof especially in schools as a medium of instruction; in the courts to access justice; for official communication to access services provided by government; amongst the people when they go about their business for which members of the public have special interest and, between and amongst private and public institutions in their interactions.

At the heart of the debates that often get reported on especially in the media and institutions established to promote democracy usually lies complaints of exclusions, marginalisation, discrimination and many other prejudices that manifest in public spaces based on language usage. At the receiving end of the prejudices are usually speakers of indigenous languages who have in the past being forced to use predominantly English and Afrikaans for communication. At schools, learning materials have for decades prioritised English and Afrikaans at the expense of indigenous languages. The languages of the courts both written and oral presentations still remain predominantly English and Afrikaans. In reality, speakers who can only command their indigenous languages often remain disadvantaged and excluded which cannot even be cured by interpretive services provided to them in court either.

Twenty one (21) years into democracy, despite the establishment of the DAC, Constitutional Institutions and heritage institutions such as PANSALB, CRL Commission and NHC charged amongst others with transformation, the promotion of heritage embedded in the indigenous languages still lag behind in terms of their usage. Despite the progressive pieces of legislation that Parliament has passed to ensure their advancement and development, indigenous languages are still not properly advanced. The passing of the UOLA and Regulations in term of which this policy has been developed should be hailed as the much needed intervention to ensure that indigenous languages find expression in official communication especially in the public sector.
